For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING-COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, AND CONSUMPTION.

As by the river, upon the bank whereof shall grow all trees for meat, whose leaf shall not wither, and the fruit thereof shall be for meat and the leaf thereof for medicine.

Ezekiel xlvii. 12.

This was high for the sixty recorded long ago, and every day gives new proof to the assurance that there shall not fail.

Additional Scientific discoveries and developments in the nature of cures given unwillingly now, the diseases that all of us have yield to the comforting relief. Of all the maladies we suffer from, none has carried more victims to an early grave than Consumption of the Lungs. Subdue this, we have every evidence to believe, it may be cured. Pitying Compassion for all their fellow beings, many have sought out the remedy for all their fellow beings, many have sought out the remedy for all their fellow beings, many have sought out the remedy

Gov. Kossuth in Lowell.

☞ Gov. Kossuth meets with a general cordial reception in the several cities he visits in Massachusetts. He succeeds in collecting, from various sources, material aid, by which he hopes to effect something favorable to the liberties of his country, at least enough to cause its countrymen to make, however desperate the prospect, one more struggle for independence. The amount collected by good judges, that he will be enabled to carry away from Massachusetts, is about sixty thousand dollars.

On Wednesday, 5th inst., Gov. Kossuth, accompanied by Madame Kossuth, M. Pulsky, and Madame Pulsky, with members of the Legislature and City Committees, visited Lowell, where they were handsomely received. They visited several of the corporation establishments and the new canal. The workmen presented to Kossuth the sum of sixty dollars. In the evening he delivered a public address, from which and other sources the funds reached, would reach about two thousand dollars.

We give the report of the conclusion of the address in Lowell, as the best illustration of his wonderful facility in adapting his discourse to the circumstances in which he happens to be placed.

After having been addressed in a speech warm welcome by the Mayor of Lowell, and introduced to the thronged assembly in the church, Gov. Kossuth delivered an address. The following report of its conclusion we copy from the Lowell Courier:

Ladies and Gentlemen, the history of your country's struggle for independence as well as the rapid development of your prosperity has been a favorite study to me from my early youth. The ardent love of liberty united together with my very heart, stimulated my mind to look around for instruction, not so much at ruins—the mournful monuments of the fragility of human things—but rather at an living free nation capable by its very life to teach the great art of life. (Applause.) I like to contemplate how freedom is to be gained, and how to be used, what are its governing powers, and what is the influence of institutions upon national character. It is natural that your country's wonderful progress in power and prosperity attracted my attention. Your country was not unknown to me, though my country had to fall, and I had ate the bitter bread of exile to see what I had thus known. And Lowell is not pre-eminent amongst the living wonders of America, that I had not studied its very existence with high interest. (Applause.)

Let me therefore tell you what it was which I felt particularly delighted in learning from what I had read about Lowell.

It was that the character of the manufacturing industry of Lowell, in its influence upon the social condition of the operatives appeared to me entirely different from what I had elsewhere seen worthy of imitation, as a field of instruction. Agriculture, manufacture and commerce must of course give profit to the capital employed therein; else capital would not take that direction; and it is necessary that it should take that direction, else neither agriculture nor manufacture nor commerce could flourish, or even exist. If labor is the one great lever of prosperity, capital is the other. Out of the reciprocal combination of both, results the welfare of a nation. They must, therefore, by the practical philosopher, be considered in their mutual combinations. (Applause.

And still in many countries that false intention prevailed at the first establishment of manufacturing industry, that it is only capital to the security and profit of which laws and institutions must reflect. Hence, we have seen countries standing high in industrial skill as well as extended manufacture, connected with the most miserable condition of the operative masses.—Princely fortunes of the few, hand in hand with the distress of millions. Capital being clothed to the unlimited mastership over labor, has lost all civic virtue in its activity. And as it is a natural necessity, that action creates re-action, and in some countries, the neglected interests of labor revolted with passionate hostility against capital. Hence the fatal movement known by the name of Socialism, threatening with unnatural convulsion the social order of the respective countries. It is a mistake that that unfortunate movement can be crushed either by denunciations or by violence. It is but a symptom of a deep-latent disease. Physicians know that a disease is not cured by beating down the symptoms; the cause of evil must be removed. (Applause.) Capital must have its profit; but the benefit of a nation's industry, or not to be considered as how it shall profit the few, but how it shall fast for the many. The greatest possible good to the greatest possible number, as an end to society is laid down as a principle by Bentham—Indeed, power and despotism may contrive it, but of society does not exist for the benefit of the members composing the society, I don't know on what principle it does exist. (Applause.)

Large factories, as the great field for the enterprise of capital, (no highly beneficial. When numerous, they afford much opportunity for the exercise of labor, and opportunity for intellectual life; when numerous, they hinder the powers of nature to be developed to help man work out a benefit to themselves. But, under these considerations to which I have alluded, I saw a large number of facts connected with the sorrowful view of a degraded condition of the masses. Here, whatever else may be said, as such I knew, and, that is delightful, their the character of labor is such, its influence tends to quite different results from those in some other countries. (Applause.) You must a good deal to keep your healthy, and a good society, which makes universal respect, and your country most happy. (Applause.)

I am informed of these things in reference to Lowell. [illegible] Lowell is [illegible] dependent position, here. It is the [illegible] of many factories here [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and
